AT THE THEATRES.

THE SOISSON. "Salome." When Massenet's beautiful "Salome" was first produced in Brussels it created a sensation and so bold was its treatment that the composer was afraid to take it to his native country, but as the reports of its beauty, its dramatic intensity, its fascinating music and wonderful stage pictures spread, assurance was given him that a Paris presentation would be allowed, and when it finally took it to Paris, with both John and Edward Deshayes and Victor Maurel in the cast it simply set, not only Paris but all of Continental Europe agog. It has been played in every music center of Europe and wherever it was given the result was the same—it scored an instantaneous success and has been proclaimed one of the greatest works of modern times. When it was first given in London, the public censor there exhibited a sensitiveness as to its propriety and insisted that the words be changed from Jerusalem to Utopia. It was first presented in this country by Oscar Hammerstein of the New York Manhattan Opera House in 1909 and it is safe to say that there are very few people in America today who are able to read the newspapers, who have not heard and do not know the wonderful sensation which it created there. At the Soisson Theatre, November 11.

"MUTT AND JEFF IN PANAMA." "MUTT AND JEFF IN PANAMA." Ona Hill has had a new book written for "Mutt and Jeff" entitled "Mutt and Jeff in Panama." The plot was suggested by the creator of the cartoon, Bud Fisher. The book was written and the play constructed by Owen Davis; the musical score by Lee Edwards and the lyrics by D. B. Cobb. The mechanical and electrical effects are startling, principal among which is a realistic reproduction of a full sized ship moving through the Panama Canal and passing out into the Pacific Ocean. The story opens at Jacksonville, Fla., where as usual "Mutt and Jeff" have been "cleaned" at the race track. The next scene is on board ship bound for Panama, presenting "Mutt" as a United States secret service officer and "Jeff" as his prisoner; they pass through the great dam and locks of the canal, finishing after a sail through this Pacific Ocean and the Midway in the Panama Exposition at San Francisco. "Mutt and Jeff in Panama" will be seen in all its glory at the Soisson Theatre, matinee and night, Saturday, November 15.

THE COLONIAL. GRAND OPERA FESTIVAL. In the organization called the "Grand Opera Festival." The local engagement is part of the second annual tour organized by Edwin Power Hesser to "spread the gospel of grand opera." No more wonderful or beautiful opera, than Gounod's "Faust" has ever been written and with the famous artists who will sing the roles in this city, it is sure of a perfect presentation. The great conductor, Maestro Arturo Tosti, is in charge of the orchestra, and the cast of principal characters is as follows: Marguerite.....Mlle. Inga Orner Marthe.....Mlle. Laura Baer Siebel.....Mlle. Madeline Bassi Faust.....M. Plinio Sigrani Valentine.....M. Michelangelo Sgrana Stephano.....M. Alina Grunwald

RASH BEGAN TO BURN AND TORTURE

Spread Until Face Completely Covered. Ashamed to Show Face. Itching Unbearable. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured in 2 Months.

226 Henry St., New York City.—"The cause of the eruption of my skin was at first a sore on my forehead which finally broke over my whole face. It was a rash and spread until my face was completely covered. At first it simply itched and then it began to burn and torture. My face was in such a bad state that I was ashamed to show my face among company. The itching was unbearable. I tried many remedies but without avail. A friend recommended Cuticura Soap and Ointment. The Cuticura Soap and Ointment eased my face so much the first night that I thought nothing was the matter, and within the short time of two months I was cured." (Signed) Miss Annie Goldstein, Oct. 12, 1912.

It costs nothing to learn how pure, sweet, effective and satisfying Cuticura Soap and Ointment are in the treatment of poor complexion, red, rough hands, itching scalp, dandruff, dry, thin and falling hair, because you need not buy them until you try them. PENNSYLVANIA POLITICS.

The announcement that Philander Chase Knox may be the Republican candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania, and that he may be opposed by Stephen Leslie Mestrezat as the Democratic candidate with the endorsement of the phantom Progressive organization, indicates that the 1914 campaign will be a lively one with Fayette county as the center of the stage.

Stronger nominations could not possibly be made. Knox has been successfully Attorney General of the United States, United States Senator and Secretary of State. He is one of the greatest living American statesmen. This is commonly accepted contemporaneous judgment. He should have been the Republican nominee for President instead of Taft, but he is a statesman rather than a politician.

Mestrezat is a member of the Supreme Court, a jurist of ability, a citizen of character and a Democrat of the strictest type. He is a man of just as far as the Democratic party has progressed, and if the Bull Moose movement threaten him with their votes he won't chase them with a club waving hostile resolutions and demanding that they vacate the reservation.

These candidates are as yet only tentative, but it is evident that the 1914 campaign in political circles is in the air.

The further announcement that President Wilson and Colonel Roosevelt will probably take part in the Pennsylvania campaign indicates that Senator Penrose will have to nail his political scalp on pretty tight or it will be in danger of being blown off in the overwhelming rush of high-power hot air.

WISDOM COKE MEN.

The Daily Iron Trade is constrained to admit that the merchant coke operators of the Connellsville region have at last acquired some measure of wisdom with years of experience, but it does not intend to apply the moral to the interests it more directly represents. Commenting on The Weekly Courier's review of the Connellsville coke trade, the Cleveland Iron Trade Journal says:

"The future of the Connellsville coke market is becoming increasingly difficult to penetrate in view of the sudden and almost decisive weakening of the pig iron market in the central west. The break in the price of standard Connellsville coke from $2.50, even, which has resulted in the present nominal minimum of $1.90, even, on both spot and contract, has been made in a matter of days. It is not the lower price, $1.95, has been made in an isolated instance or two, but it is not believed the general minimum is under $1.90. Little inquiry is quoted for prompt coke, and no endeavor is yet being made generally by buyers, to enter the 1914 requirements. Some days ago, it is said, some coke for delivery for next year was sold at $2.25, even, but scarcely enough to establish a market price definitely.

"While there is no doubt that the price was primarily, undoubtedly, to further softening of the pig iron market, Valley Packer is now quotable at $13.25 to $13.50; No. 2 Foundry, at $13.75 to $14; and Bessemer, at $15.25 to $15.50; but none of these prices is firmly established. Even the Southern market is showing more weakness, under the strain of no sales of consequence being made in weeks, and more iron is available today at $10.50. Birmingham, than for some time. Blast furnaces are blowing out in the North and a net total of 14 fewer stacks was blowing on the last day of October than on the last day of September. It is reported to be credited, additional stacks are placed for blowing out in the near future.

"Outside lowering the price of standard Connellsville coke, the present inordinate slowing down of the market in further curtailment of shipments from the Connellsville regions. This cutting down of shipments has undoubtedly thrown considerable coke upon the market and further has resulted in a considerable quantity of the coke being stored aboard cars, much to the disgust of a restless traffic managers. Of course, this coke on track must move quickly or pay considerable storage charges, which is not profitable. This week will likely see an additional number of ovens closing down and it is said a number of workers will be let go since it is more profitable to close down a portion of a plant definitely than to try to run on short time. It is not unlikely, therefore, that soon will be heard the news of the start of an exodus of foreign-born workers from the Connellsville regions bound across the water.

"In the meantime, the future of the coke market is being complicated by the slowness of foundry owners to buy, and the price of standard foundry coke is now nominally $2.50 to $2.75. It is not the future of a coke operator to be profitable for long, especially in view of the excellent prices he has been getting for his product in the past 18 months. However, he is wise enough to save his surplus dollars by keeping them in the bank rather than by expending them in an unprofitable endeavor to keep some thousands of market conditions. The Connellsville coke operator of this day is a general loser.

Our esteemed Iron Trade Journal is misinformed concerning some of its predictions, and it is consequently at fault in some of its conclusions. The break in the coke price was not the result of a general agreement; that such a reduction was wise, but because of the fact that one of the weaker brethren set the $1.90 price, and this and other conditions compelled a general recession to it. The price is not a fixed price. It is an open market price, and at present at least the market will have no support.

Contracts for 1914 will not be set.

tered into at its figures. Coke may remain low in price during the first quarter, but it will probably in that time be the policy of the Connellsville operators to sell from month to month as heretofore, and not to themselves up with low prices for a long time. In the meantime, furnaces may as well get out of their systems the money covered notion that the price of iron will be permitted to regulate the price of Connellsville coke.

The Daily Iron Trade must also remember in analyzing the Connellsville coke production and shipments that the major portion of both do not enter the iron trade market at all, being manufactured and consumed by steel interests direct. The H. C. Frick Coke Company alone are operating 85% of the total active ovens and the combined furnace interest 62%, leaving but 53% operated by the merchant interest. Furthermore, the surplus coke mentioned by the furnace operator is almost wholly furnace coke. The merchant interest has no large accumulation of stock to dump upon the market.

The Daily Iron Trade gives the merchant operators credit for their wisdom in avoiding such conditions and it is to be hoped that the credit will not be misplaced, but even if the Third Section whose policy seems to be to sell at the market when possible and under it when necessary.

AN AWFUL CONFESSION.
The Bull Moose vote was just enough to defeat the Republican candidates for Poor Director, which fact led the Uniontown Record, Bull Moose organ, in the exuberance of its joy, to say that it was "rejoiced" to procure the defeat of the Republican ticket, and that it is "rejoiced" over the result of its work.

The public is left no longer in doubt as to the true political mission of the Uniontown newspaper. Its editorial announcement rather clouded the issue. It led us to believe that the Record had come to preach a high and holy crusade against the evils of our political system, and to mend them as fully and as promptly as might be.

It is rather disappointing to be thus rudely disillusioned. We seek in vain for some excuse. There is none. The declaration comes direct. It is bold and bare of sentiment or room for doubt as to its brutal meaning.

This shining spectacle of political purity, this gorgeously gowned angel of political virtue, is by its own brazen confession a common factional strumpet.

THE VANISHING BULL MOOSE.
Republicans are making an earnest and very successful attempt to get to the bottom of this feeling. This feeling applies not only at home but also abroad, but the Republican audience are naturally most gratifying.

In Fayette county the Bull Moose movement has lapsed into innocuous desuetude in spite of determined efforts backed by a real newspaper to revive it. In Washington county, the home of original and militant insurgency in the form of Ernest Francis Acheson, where the Washington movement has been high into a Washington county movement, the Republicans won handily over all opposition, including the Bull Moose, which party fell from first to third place.

The Bull Moose movement has become wholly factional and will be so regarded henceforth.

The esteemed News admits that the esteemed Chairman Sterling must have been active in the recent campaign, yet a statement to this effect in the columns of The Courier during the campaign brought forth a positive denial from the esteemed News. As much as we esteem the esteemed News we cannot extend its consistency, because their "aint none."

Uniontown newspapers refer to the town's "city" institute. Uniontown is not a city yet. Connellsville had to remain an incorporation four years. Uniontown will stick around for at least two years.

The Constitution does not apply in the Third Ward.

In spite of some opinions not wholly free from bias, the election returns taken as a whole indicate quite clearly that Fayette county is still Republican in questions involving Republican policy.

Fayette county people seem to favor the Constitution as it is.

The results of the election in Fayette county indicate that most Republicans have returned to their party and that the Bull Moose movement is now confined largely to a few self-proclaimed leaders.

If the Fayette county doctors keep up that dinner habit the Trust Doctors are likely to get suspicious.

We know of no particular reason why the Upfit element should have exerted itself to give Fayette county a Democratic administration of the Poor House. Prior Democratic management has not been remarkable for either honesty or efficiency.

The Third Ward ought to be divided into two election precincts, but its returns will probably come in last just the same.

There is no law against calling it Indian Summer.

Chairman Bruce Sterling's official paper gives him full faith and credit for all Democratic gains in Fayette county at this election, and then has the cold cheek to refer to them as "the people's victory." It might have had the decency to put such widely conflicting claims into separate paragraphs.

Some ear orders are coming out, the railroad may have the situation, provided they are saved themselves.

Looks as if Fayette county would be the center of the stage during the political season of 1914.

Mr. Mestrezat is not an "avowed" Governor, but he has his "round."

CANOEING.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old Swash."

Canoeing is one of the grandest and most beneficial of outdoor sports. By its means the devotee is only able to fit his jumps to capacity with fresh, clean air every day, but to soak them in water, once or twice a week, throughout the summer. Canoeing requires much strength in the wrists and also a level head. Any man who is a good tight-rope walker can navigate a canoe with success. Experts in the art speak scornfully of the pro-vailing belief that canoes are lumpy and must be balanced. They declare that a canoe is safer than a steamboat, but when a man who cannot swim strikes early on in one of these temperamental craft, they call him an idiot in a loud and harmonious chorus.

Canoes are made of thin wooden ribs covered with canvas, and sit on the water as lightly as a feather. It is a magnificent sport to swing gently from wave to wave in a 16-foot canoe, steering it deftly hither and elsewhere with a broad blade paddle, and ever and anon climbing to the surface with a loud snort and pumping out the craft by seizing it in both hands and skillfully flipping 60 gallons of water from the bow.

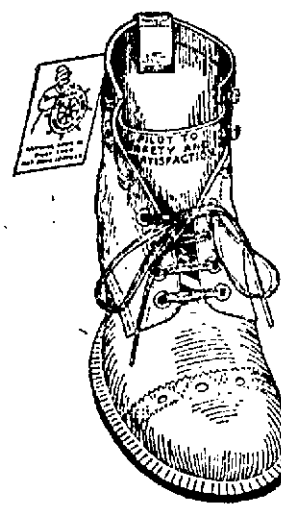

Experts disagree as to what is the best stroke for practical canoeing, but a gentle under-oar stroke is the most successful with considerable success.

Real canoeists seem to navigate in plain water, preferring the kind that is adulterated with rocks and trout to an extensive degree. After a canoeist has mastered his craft he usually takes it north to the headwaters of some disorderly river and after packing 50 pounds of frying pan and bacon, wrapped up in a blanket, in the bow he careers down stream through rapids and over waterfalls for several hundred miles. Whenever he dodges a rock it counts one for his side.

server many miles away decline to get away-stricken over Madeline's feat of walking over Niagara Falls on a wire cable.

Canoeing develops the muscles and courage and gives the student there a beautiful bronze complexion on the shoulders and arms. Canoeists are also contented men. They are not continually clamoring to Congress for a $100,000,000 appropriation to deep-dredge the Mississippi. Give them a tea-bag full of water arranged in a row over a mossy rock and they are happy and content.

FARM EXPERIMENT STATION TO COME TO THIS SECTION

Great Forward Step by Mt. Pleasant Township High School.

STUDENTS FROM TWO COUNTIES

Having a "Farm Doctor" in Westmoreland and Fayette Counties Means Much; First School of Kind in Western Penna.; Other Notes.

Special to The Courier.

SCOTTDAL, Nov. 8.—The establishment of an agricultural school at the Mount Pleasant township high school is the first of the kind in Western Pennsylvania, where out of 100 schools applying only six will be granted. In agricultural matters this is the most important movement ever made for the farmers of Westmoreland and Fayette counties, since it puts a state expert right here among the people, a "farm doctor," who can go out and investigate any perplexities of the farmers, fruit growers and gardeners, and who will be right at hand to give instruction, the same as State College.

The school opens up the way for any young man, between the ages of 13 and 20, if a farmer ever lives that long and wants to learn to have a thorough course. The school was secured through the untiring efforts of Principal Hubert C. Elcher, a Scottdale boy, who is at the head of the Mt. Pleasant township high school, and who was backed in his efforts by the finest country high school plan probably in this state.

Several weeks ago Mr. Elcher conceived the idea of securing such a school and went into the winter thoroughly. He found that in competition with the best school in the state desiring to secure the school as its expert.

The Mount Pleasant township high school building is well fitted and school inspectors say that its chemical and physical laboratories surpass those of most colleges.

With the installation of the agricultural course there will be fitted up another laboratory. The state report who will have charge of the course will be Prof. L. H. Dennis. His salary will be $1,200 per year, and he will be, it is announced, at the service of the farmers of both counties. The Mount Pleasant township high school will be virtually a state experiment station located in this section.

Pupils may enter from any of the townships, the district being compelled by law to pay for the tuition, and the state afterward reimburses them for one-half of the money expended. As the West Penn lines run close to the school building it will be easy to reach the place.

Mr. Elcher is to be congratulated on his success and the people of the two counties are to be congratulated on securing such an opportunity to get the best that the state offers its farmers. The establishment comes to a section where farmers are coming among the most progressive and wide awake in the state.

KOBACKER'S

THE BIG STORE

The Store of the People

YES, that's its true name—The store of the People. Time and again it has proved its ability; has demonstrated its resourcefulness. In giving its customers a voice in the closing question, it showed its willingness to meet all the people's varied wants at any and all times—the needs of everybody.

A count of the votes received since the announcement of our new closing hours and the start of the voting, show that the sentiment of a majority of our customers coincides with that of the management of The Big Store—in favor of closing at 5:30 P. M. and giving all employees the full benefit of a shortened working day.

Therefore, "Kobacker's" will close at 5:30 P. M. every day except Saturday.

On Saturday the Dry Goods and Women's Apparel Departments will be closed at 9 P. M. The Men's Clothing Department will remain open until 10 P. M.

Making Money

The man who is making money is pretty busy and has little time for reading. He surely has not the time to read all of the statistical reports contained in leading business and financial publications. Realizing this we have all basic information of a dependable nature boiled down by trained statisticians and the result is published in the form of a monthly Report of Trade.

These brief reports contain much valuable information for the heavy business man. We would like you to have them and will place your name on the list to receive the Report each month, if you so desire.

"Nothing Unleash of Itself." While the Jew was forbidden the use of swine, rabbits, oysters, etc., these restrictions were tests of his obedience to God; just as the forbidden fruit was thereafter unclean to Adam and Eve. The Apostle's argument is that to the Jew who died to all hope of attaining eternal life through the Law Covenant and who became united to Christ, the restrictions of the Law Covenant would no longer be binding. And, of course, to the Gentile, who never was under the Law Covenant, its restrictions would have no application when he accepted Christ.

But if any man's reasoning faculties were so twisted that he thought himself under obligation, he would be responsible according to his judgment. To violate his conscience would mean that he had willingly committed sin, for he would be wrong in doing what he thought to be wrong, however harmless the matter might be in itself.

The brother who is strong mentally, morally and physically, should gladly abstain from whatever would stumble another. Should we not be glad to lay down our lives for the brethren? If so, should we not be ready to abstain from using trifling liberties for our weaker brother's sake, for whom Christ died? This is a strong argument. Rather preserve others from temptation too strong for them by faithfully abstaining from everything that might appear evil in others' sight, however right it might be in your own sight, and however correct your own judgment of the Divine Law on the subject.

The advantages connected with membership in God's Kingdom consist rather in righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit enjoyed by probationary members of the Kingdom class.

MESSIAH'S KINGDOM. The Glorious Day of Divine Favor is Nearing. The period in which sin is permitted has been a dark night to humanity, never to be forgotten; but the glorious day of righteousness and divine favor is soon to be ushered in by Messiah. He, as the SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS, shall arise and shine fully and clearly into and upon all, bringing healing and blessing, which will more than counterbalance the dreadful night of weeping, sighing, pain, sickness and death, in which the growing creation has been so long. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the MORNING."

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF BAYARD VEILLER

Copyright, 1912, by the E. K. F. Company.

"It is the truth," Mary said firmly. "I have served three years in prison." There was a silence of a minute that was like years. Dick turned his tortured face to his bride of a day. Then he spoke again more hesitatingly. "Say there's a mistake. Mary spoke with a simplicity that admitted no denial."

"It's all quite true," the man who had no loved her, trusted her, stood trembling for a moment, tottered and sank into a chair. The father looked at Mary with a reproach that was pathetic. "See," he said, and his heavy voice was for once this with passion—"see what you've done to my boy!"

"What is that compared to what you have done to me?"

"What have I done to you?" he questioned, uncomprehendingly. "Do you remember what I said to you the day you had me sent away?"

"I don't remember you at all," "Perhaps you remember Mary Turner, who was arrested four years ago for robbing your store, and perhaps you remember that she asked to speak to you before they took her to prison?"

"The heavy loaded man gave a start. There was a girl who swore she was innocent—yes, she swore that she was innocent. And she would have got off—only you asked the judge to make an example of her."

"You are that girl?" "I am that girl."

There was a little interval of silence. Then Mary spoke again remorselessly. "You took away my good name; you smashed my life; you put me behind bars. You owe for all that. Well, I've begun to collect."

"And that is why you married my boy?" "It is," Mary gave the answer coldly, calmly.

"You're lying, save to one—her husband," Dick suddenly roared and "with the violence of one sure."

"It is not!" He stood up and went to Mary, and took her two hands in his, very gently, and very truly.

"Mary," he said softly, yet with a strength of conviction, "you married me because you love me."

"No," she said gravely, "no, I did not!"

"And you love me now?" he went on insistently. "No, no!" Mary's denial came like a key for escape.

"You love me now!" There was a masterful quality in his declaration, which seemed to ignore her negation. "I don't," she repeated bitterly.

"Look me in the face and say that." There was a silence that seemed long, though it was measured in the passing of seconds. At last Mary, who had planned so long for this hour, gathered her forces and spoke valiantly. Her voice was low, but without any weakness of doubt.

"I do not love you."

"Just the same you are my wife, and I'm going to keep you and make you love me."

"She's a crook!" Burke said. "I don't care what you've heard," Dick exclaimed. "From now on you'll go straight. You'll walk the straightest line a woman ever walked. You'll put all thoughts of vengeance out of your heart because I'll fill it with something bigger—I'll fill it with love for me."

Burke again: "I tell you she's a crook!" Mary bowed a little, and then turned her face toward Dick.

"And, if I am, who made me one? You can't send a girl to prison and have her come out anything else." Burke swung himself around in a movement of complete disgust.

"She didn't get her time for good behavior."

"And I'm proud of it!" came her instant retort. "Do you know what goes on there behind those stone walls? Do you, Mr. District Attorney, whose business it is to send girls there? Do you know what a girl is expected to do to get time off for good behavior? If you don't, ask the keepers."

"I served every minute of my time—every minute of it, three full, whole years. Do you wonder that I want to get even, that some one has got to pay? Four years ago, you took away my name—and gave me a number. Now, I've given up the number—and I've got your name!"

CHAPTER XII.

Aftermath of Tragedy.

IF Dick, both father and son, endured much suffering throughout the night and day that followed the scene in Mary Turner's apartment, when she had made known the accomplishment of her revenge on the older man by her enmeshing of the younger.

Dick had followed the others out of her presence at her command, emphasizing by her leaving him alone when he would have pleaded further with her. Since then he had given to tain another interview with his bride, but she had refused him. He was denied admission to the apartment. Only the faint answering of the ringing of the telephone and his notes were seemingly unobscured.

Distraught by this violent interjection of torment into a life that hitherto had known no important suffering, Dick Gilder showed what mottle of man lay beneath his debonair appearance. And that mottle was of a kind worth while. He did not for an instant believe that she was guilty of the crime with which she had been originally charged and for which she had served a sentence in prison. For the rest, he could understand and even depreciate how the venom of the wrong inflicted on her had poisoned her nature through the years, till she had worked out its evil through the scheme of which he was the innocent victim. He cared little for the fact that recently she had devoted herself to devious devices for making money, to ingenious schemes for legal plunder.

So, in the face of this catastrophe, where a less love must have been destroyed utterly, Dick remained loyal. His passionate regard did not falter for a moment. It never even occurred to him that he might cast her off, might yield to his father's prayers, and abandon her.

The father suffered with the son. He was a proud man, intensely gratified over the commanding position to which he had achieved in the commercial world, proud of his business integrity, of his standing in the community as a leader, proud of his social position, proud of all of the son whom he loved. Now, this hideous disaster threatened his pride at every turn—worse, it threatened the one person in the world whom he really loved.

He realized that his son loved the woman—nor could he wonder much at that. His keen eyes had perceived Mary Turner's graces of form, her loveliness of face. He had appreciated, too, in some measure at least, the fineness of his mental fiber and the capacities of her heart. Deep within him, denied any outlet, he knew here lurked a curious, subtle sympathy for the girl in her scheme of revenge against himself.

Gilder, in his library this night, was pacing impatiently to and fro, eagerly listening for the sound of his son's return to the house. He was anxious for the coming of Dick to tell him he would make one more appeal. If that should fail—well, he must use the influence at his command to secure the forcible parting of the adulterers from his son.

Finally the son entered the room and went at once to his father, who was standing waiting, facing the door. "I'm awfully sorry I'm so late, dad," he said simply.

"You have any news?" the father demanded gravely. "But there was great affection in the dash of his gray eyes as he scanned the young man's face, and the touch of the hand that he put on Dick's shoulder was very tender. "With that woman again?"

"No, father, not with her. She won't see me."

"Naturally! She's got all she wanted from you—your name!"

"It's mine, too, you know, sir."

Gilder looked at his son with a strange expression. "Dick," he cried—"you are all I have in the world. You will have to free yourself from this woman somehow. You owe me that much."

"What can you owe her? She tricked me into the marriage. Why, legally it's not even that. There's been nothing more than a wedding ceremony. We must get you out of the scrape."

"I'm not sure that I want to get out of it, father."

"You want to stay married to this jail bird?"

"I'm very fond of her."

"Now that I know?"

"Now that I know?" Dick said distinctly. "Don't you see, father? Why, she is justified in a way—in her own mind anyhow. I mean, she was innocent when she was sent to prison."

"Don't talk to me about her innocence. There's only one course open to you, my boy. You must get her out of your house. If you don't want her going to do the day your wife is thrown into a patrol wagon and carried to police headquarters, for it's sure to happen! The cleverest of people make mistakes, and some day she'll make one."

Dick threw out his hands in a gesture of supreme denial. But the father went on remorselessly.

"They will stand her up where the detectives will walk past her with marks on their faces. Her picture, of course, is already in the rogues' gallery, but they will take another—yes, and the imprints of her fingers and the measurements of her body."

The son was writhing under the words. The woman of whom these things were said was the woman whom he loved. Yet every word had in it the piercing, horrible sting of truth.

"That's what they will do to your wife," Gilder went on harshly, "to the woman who bears your name and mine. What are you going to do about it?"

"It will never happen. She will go straight, dad. That I know. You would know it if you only knew her as I do."

Gilder was in despair. What argument could avail him? He cried out sharply in desperation.

"Do you refuse what justice is doing? Do you want to smash, Dick, just at the beginning of your life. Oh, I beg you, boy, stop! Put this girl out of your thoughts and start fresh. You're all I have, my boy."

"Yes, dad," came the answer. "If I could avoid it I wouldn't hurt you for anything in the world. I'm sorry, dad, awfully sorry!"

He hesitated, then his voice rang out clearly: "But I must fight this out by myself—fight it out in my own way. And I'm going to do it!"

The father entered. "A man to see you, sir," he said. "The master took the card. 'Very well,' he said, 'allow him up.' His glance met the wondering gaze of his son."

"It's Burke," he explained. "What on earth can he want—at this time of night?" Dick exclaimed. "You may as well get used to visits from the police."

A moment later Inspector Burke entered the room. "She's skipped!" he said triumphantly. "Dick made a step forward. His eyes flashed, and there was anger in his voice as he replied: 'I don't believe it.'"

"She left this morning for Chicago," Burke said, lying with a manner that long habit rendered altogether convincing. "I told you she'd go."

He turned to the father and spoke with an air of beautiful good nature. "Now, all you have to do is to get this boy out of the scrape and you'll be right."

"If we only could!" The cry came with deepest earnestness from the lips of Gilder, but there was little hope in his voice.

"I guess we can find a way to have the marriage annulled or whatever they do to marriages that don't take," said Burke.

The brutal assurance of the man in this referring to things that were sacred moved Dick to wrath.

"Don't you interfere," he said. Nevertheless Burke held to the topic. "Interfered! Huh!" he ejaculated, grinning broadly. "Why, that's what I'm paid to do. Listen to me, son. The minute you begin mixing up with crooks you ain't in a position to give orders to any one. The crooks have got no right in the law of the police. Just remember that."

But Dick was not listening. His thoughts were again wholly with the woman he loved, who, as the inspector declared, had fled from him.

"Where's she gone in Chicago?" Burke answered in his usual gruff fashion, but with a note of kindness that was not without its effect on Dick.

"I'm no mind reader," he said. "But she'll probably stop at the Blackstone—that is, until the Chicago police are tipped off that she is in town."

The face of the young man took on a totally different expression. He went close to the inspector and spoke with intense seriousness.

"Burke," he said pleadingly, "give me a chance. I'll leave for Chicago in the morning. Give me twenty-four hours start before you begin hounding her."

The inspector smiled acquiescence. "Seems reasonable," he admitted.

"No, no, Dick!" the father cried. "You shall not go. You shall not go!"

The inspector shot a word of warning to Gilder in an aside that Dick could not hear.

"Keep still," he replied. "It's all right."

"You give me your word, inspector," Dick said, "that you won't notify the police in Chicago until I've been there twenty-four hours?"

"You're on," Burke replied gently. "They won't get a whisper out of me until the time is up."

"Then I'll go," Dick smiled rather wanly at his father. "You know, dad, I'm sorry, but I've got to do what I think is the right thing."

It was not until the door was closed after Dick that Burke spoke.

"He'll go to Chicago in the morning, you think, don't you?" he asked.

"Certainly," Gilder answered. "But I don't like it."

"Best thing that could have happened! You see, he won't do her harm."

"Where did she go then?" Gilder queried, wholly at a loss.

"Nowhere yet. But just about the time he's starting for the west I'll have her down at headquarters. Demarcus will have her indicted before noon. She'll go to trial in the afternoon, and tomorrow night she'll be sleeping up the river. That's where she is going."

Gilder stood motionless for a moment. "But," he said wonderingly, "you can't do that."

"Well, perhaps I can't, but I will!" Suddenly his face grew hard. His heavy jaw shot forward aggressively as he spoke.

"Think I'm going to let that girl make a joke of the police department? Why, I'm here to get her to stop her anywhere. Her gang is going to break into your house tonight."

"What?" Gilder demanded. "You mean she's coming here as a thief?"

"Not exactly," Inspector Burke confessed, "but her pals are coming to try to pull off something right here. She wouldn't come, not if I know her. She's too clever for that. Why, if she knew what Garson was planning to do, she'd stop him."

The inspector paused suddenly. For a long minute his face was seamed with thought. Then he spoke his thought with a low strong voice, as if to kill an ox. His face was radiant.

"I've got her," he cried. "He went to the desk where the telephone was and took up the receiver."

"Give me 3100 Spring," he said. As he waited for the connection he smiled widely on the astonished Gilder.

"Headquarters?" he called. "Inspector Burke speaking. Who's in my office? I want him quick!" He smiled as he listened, and he spoke again to Gilder. "It's Smith, the best man I have. That's luck, if you ask me. Then again he spoke into the mouthpiece of the telephone."

"Oh, Ed, send some one up to that Turner woman. You have the address. Just see that she is tipped off that Joe Garson and some pals are going to break into Edward Gilder's house tonight. Get some stool pigeon to hand her the information. You'd better get to work quick. Understand?"

The inspector hung up, the receiver and faced his host with a contented smile. "What good will all that do?" Gilder demanded impatiently.

"She'll come to stop 'em. When we get the rest of the gang we'll grab her too. Just call your man for a minute, will you, Mr. Gilder?"

Gilder pressed the electric button on his desk. At the same moment, through the octagonal window, came a blinding flash of light that rested for seconds, then vanished. Burke was startled by the mysterious radiance.

"What's that?" he demanded sharply. "It's the flashlight from the Metropolitan tower," Gilder explained. "It swings around this way about every fifteen minutes. The servant forgot to draw the curtains."

CHAPTER XIII.

The Burglary at Gilder's.

THE entrance of the butler brought the inspector's thoughts back to the matter in hand.

"My man," he said authoritatively, "I want you to go up to the roof and open the scuttle. You'll find some men waiting up there. Bring 'em down here. They're police officers. You get 'em down here, and then you go to bed and stay there till morning. Understand?"

The butler looked at his master for guidance. Receiving a nod, he said: "Very well, sir."

"How do you know they're going to break into the house tonight?" Gilder demanded of Burke, "or do you only think they're going to break into the house?"

"I know they are. I fixed it."

"Sure; did it through a stool pigeon?" "Oh, an informer!" Gilder interrupted, a little doubtfully.

"Yes," Burke agreed; "stool pigeon is the police name for him. Really, he's the vilest thing that crawls."

"But if you think that," Gilder expostulated, "why do you have anything to do with that sort of person?"

"Because it's good business," the inspector replied. "We know he's a spy and a traitor and that every time he comes near us we ought to use a disinfectant. But we deal with him just the same because we have to. Now, the stool pigeon in this trick is a swell English crook. He went to Garson yesterday with a scheme to rob your house. He tried on Mary Turner, too, but she told Garson to leave it alone. But he met Griggs afterward and agreed to pull it off. Griggs got word to me that it's coming off tonight, and so, you see, Mr. Gilder, that's how I know."

"I see," Gilder admitted without any enthusiasm. "But why do you have your men come down to the roof?"

"It wasn't safe to bring them in the front way. It's a cliche the house is being watched. I wish you would let me have your latch key. I want to come back and make this collar myself."

"But why not stay, now that you are here?"

"Suppose some of them saw me come in? There wouldn't be anything doing until after they saw me go out again."

The hall door opened, and the butler re-entered the room. Behind him came Cassidy and two other detectives in plain clothes. At a word from his master the disturbed Thomas withdrew.

"Now," Burke went on briskly as the door closed behind the servant, "where could these men stay out of sight until they're needed?"

Which followed a little discussion which ended in the selection of a room at the end of the passage on the ground floor.

"And now, Mr. Gilder," the inspector said energetically, "I'm going to give you the same tip I gave your man. Go to bed and stay there."

"But the boy," Gilder protested. "What about him? He's the one thing of importance to me."

"If he says anything more about going to Chicago just you let him go, that's all! It's the best place for him for the next few days."

"You're here," Burke said to Cassidy, "and I hold you responsible. I'm coming back to get you when you're wanted. You'll wait in the storeroom out there and don't make a move till you hear from me, unless by any chance things go wrong and you get a call from Griggs. Let's get a whistle, and he'll use it if necessary. Got that straight?" Cassidy declared an entire understanding of the directions.

All the men left the room Burke turned again to Gilder.

"Just one thing more," he said. "After I've gone I want you to stay up for a half hour anyhow, with the lights burning. Do you see? I want to be sure to give the Turner woman time to get here while that gang is at work."

Gilder scrupulously followed the directions of the police inspector. Directly he had remained in the library until the allotted time was elapsed. He fled from place to place, his mind heavy with distress under the shadow that threatened to blight the life of his cherished son. Finally, with a sense of relief he put out the lights and went to his chamber.

His thoughts were most with his son, and ever as he thought of Dick his fury waxed against the woman who had enmeshed the boy in her plotting for vengeance on himself. And into Gilder's thoughts now crept a doubt, one that struck him as a blow of justice. A horrible suspicion that he had betrayed Mary Turner crept into his brain and would not let him.

He fought it with all the strength of him, and that was much, but ever it rode there. Mary Turner herself, too, was in a condition utterly wrecked, and for the same cause—Dick Gilder. That source of the father's suffering was here as well. She had won her ambition of vengeance on the man who had sent her to prison. And now the joy of it was a torture, for the puppet of her plans, the son, had suddenly become the chief thing in her life.

She had taken it for granted that he would leave her after he came to know that her marriage to him was only a device to bring shame on his father. Instead he loved her. That fact seemed the secret of her distress. He loved her. More, he dared believe, and to answer boldly, that she loved him. That he acted otherwise the matter would have been simple enough. But he loved her—loved her still, though he knew the shame that had clouded her life, knew the motive that had led her to accept him as a husband. More—by a sublime, audaciously he declared that she loved him.

There came a thrill in her heart each time she thought of that—that she loved him. The idea was monstrous, of course, and yet—here, as always, she broke off, a hot flush blazing in her cheeks.

Mary Turner was just ready for bed when a note came by a messenger who waited for no answer, as he told the yawning maid. As Mary read the roughly scrawled message, she was caught in the grip of terror. The man who had saved her from death had yielded to temptation. As he had saved her so she must save him. She hurried into the gown she had just put off. Then she went to the telephone book and searched for the number of Gilder's house.

A few moments before Mary Turner received the note from the hands of the sleepy maid one of the leaves of the octagonal window in the library of Richard Gilder's town house swung open under the persuasive influence of a thin rod of steel, cunningly used, and Joe Garson stepped confidently into the dark room.

For a space he rested motionless, listening intently. Renewed, he drew out an electric torch and set it glowing. A little disk of light touched here and there about the room, traveling very swiftly and in methodical circles. Satisfied by the survey, Garson crossed to the hall door, where he listened for any sound of life without and found none. The door into the passage that led to the storeroom where the detectives waited next engaged his businesslike attention. And here again there was naught to provoke his suspicion.

It seemed to him that everything was in readiness for the coming of his associates. There remained only to give them the signal in the room around the corner where they waited at a telephone. He seated himself in Gilder's chair at the desk and drew the telephone to him.

"Give me 909 Bryant," he said. There was a little wait. Then an answer in a voice he knew came over the wire.

"To me, Connellsville?"

URGES NEW LAWS TO AID DEVELOPMENT OF THE PUBLIC DOMAIN

Geologic Survey Director
Points Need of Modern Legislation.

PROTECTION FOR ALL PARTIES

Objects to a Tax on Products From Government-Owned Land If for the Primary Purpose of Raising Revenue; Leasehold System the Best.

The disposition of the natural resources of the public domain is under discussion at the sessions of the American Mining Congress in Philadelphia, October 20 to 24. Director George Otis Smith, of the United States Geological Survey, in his contribution to the discussion stated that both advances in public opinion and changes in economic conditions have placed demands upon legislation for the mineral lands of the United States. He cannot meet the requirements of today. "To illustrate this point," he said, "the coal mined west of the Mississippi river in 1873 amounted to less than two million tons, but last year it was over 24 million tons. The oil production in the public land states in 1897 was two million barrels and last year 111 million barrels, yet 1873 and 1897 are the dates of the latest Federal enactments providing for the acquisition of coal and oil lands respectively. Here are some infant industries that have grown up and deserve laws to fit.

"Regarding the future status of mining on the public lands the following propositions are believed to stand out plainly: The mining men, like the rest of the people, will see that this big productive business belongs in the public service. They will not simply leave it to the hands of a few individuals, but will see that the public owner and private owner can best cooperate, and the purpose of this sympathetic cooperation will be to lower costs of production in order to permit reasonable prices to the consumer, and at the same time provide fair wages to the mine worker and adequate profits to the capitalist and operator.

"The new laws need to recognize more fully the importance of taking something out of the ground and making it useful. Every man who has a part in this undertaking, from prospector to ultimate consumer, has his rights and these rights must be recognized, and protected. All these men are in reality partners in the enterprise.

"We want these laws for the coal and oil and phosphate lands first of all for the sake of the citizens who wish to use the mineral products from these lands. As consumers we are all concerned with prices, and to benefit the many as well as the few, legislation must favor low costs. Therefore the first essential of mineral-land legislation is that no provision in the law should place any unnecessary charge, burden, or operating cost upon the operator. Accordingly no royalty should be imposed with the primary purpose of revenue. The most recently issued water-power permit provides that the Federal Government shall receive a royalty which varies directly with the square of the average price paid by the public for the electric current. The loss the consumer pays, the less the Government receives.

"Second in importance is the need of offering to the developer of an unused resource an inducement commensurate with the hazardous or speculative character of his undertaking. This cuts both ways. To promote development, mining laws should attract the men having the knowledge and capital necessary to engage in the business of mining, but too often in the past the practice has been for the majority of buyers to sit by and watch a few real money test out the ground, when, if a strike was made, these hangers-on at once had valuable claims to sell. This means the unearned increment in large amounts, and in the end the consumer pays for it. To control this kind of a mineral-land lottery is bad economics. On the other hand, however, any law for the disposition of mineral land, whether by lease or not, should provide large rewards for the real prospector who so often stakes their all against an uncertain and speculative future, when they lose they have no redress and when they win their discoveries usually add more to the nation's wealth than to their own pockets. They deserve to be in the preferred class.

"A third side of this proposition is the question of the inalienable right of each citizen to his share of the nation's mineral wealth as the 'something for nothing' that goes with American citizenship. The citizen's right and interest in any undeveloped mineral is a double one—first that measured by the possibility of the mineral being mined and thus made useful at a cost to him that shall not be unnecessarily high, and second, his right to an equal chance to undertake mining within the limits of his own ability. He has absolutely no right to a speculative profit from public mineral lands, and his profit as a producer should be measured by his own productive contribution.

"Federal legislation should recognize classes of land, and while the title to the surface of lands suitable for agricultural use should be granted in fee, that continuing the wise policy of encouraging home-making public interest and the need of protecting the consumer against private monopoly are believed to justify the reservation by the Government, at the time that the surface patent is granted, of all mineral wealth beneath the surface for separate disposition, under mineral-land laws, in private transfers of land the reservation of mineral rights is becoming more and more the common practice.

The possessory title to the mineral land should be retained in the Government simply as a practical method of assuring development under the best conditions. Let us regard the Federal government as a trustee rather than as a sovereign landlord, and the idea and purpose of proprietorship by the people become more easily understood. The application of the lease idea to the mining of precious metals, is not at all of comparable importance with its application to what have been termed 'public utility' mineral resources, such as coal, petroleum, phosphate, and potash. The mining law should provide for prospecting permits that will give exclusive occupancy during periods only long enough for full exploration by only bona-fide prospectors. The annual assessment force has had a long enough run. The prospecting permit will ripen into a lease when the results of exploration justify the operation of the property on a producing basis. Where the proof of coal or oil or other mineral substance in minable quantity is a discovery of the type termed 'solid'—in the case of oil, the prospector rendering such service to the industry and to the public should receive his lease upon purely nominal terms.

The essential features of the lease should be conditions covering full and continuous use, economy and safety of operation, and control of occupancy. The transfers should not be prohibited but simply made subject to approval by the people's representative. If in any region large units of production are seen to favor lower costs and a longer-lived industry, all for the public good, consolidation of holdings should be encouraged and transfers of leases permitted; but if the purpose of large holdings is monopolization in order to curtail production and raise prices, transfers to that end should be denied the executive approval necessary to make them effective. The advantage of the lease is that it allows the government to exercise continued control in the public interest.

Are the People Penurious?

—OR IS IT JUST LIBERAL, MERCENARY
MOTIVES THAT PROMPTS A STORE
TO INVEIGLE THE PUBLIC
INTO A SCHEME FOR OVERWORKING ITS MEN EMPLOYEES

It attempts to hide its covetous parsimony in a plea that stores are a "public institution"—but what public institution would work its employees to excess? Railroads and other modes of transportation; banking establishments; the postal service; lighting plants and gas companies; the schools, churches and the public library; political bodies and the whole fabric of society—ALL are public institutions in a truer sense than are stores.

Because:
The first named are, in a measure, regulated by the people in the discharge of their offices. And the conduct of stores is in the hands of individuals to give good service or not, according to the ability and contentment of the store's workers. Heartly good will and service cannot be bought. It is a voluntary expression of one's contentment, and hardly influenced by the weekly pay envelope alone.

Great railway systems safeguard life and property by regulating their hours of employment. They accomplish things that would never result by overworked employees. Next to honest merchandise, you look for service from stores. Service in courtesy, interest, alertness and willingness toward each patron. All this must come from the employees—the whole force, telephone operator to bundle-boy—and the salespeople direct. Overworked people can't be in accord with the store's best interests, nor give a full measure of true service to the store's patrons.

Saturday nine o'clock closing as demonstrated here November 1st, meets with the full approval of the people generally. Shortened hours of employment is in perfect accord with organized labor. They've spent years fighting for that very thing for themselves, and to ask their influence towards prolonging the work of others is nothing short of a rank insult.

The people are not ungenerous; nor are they greedy of a store worker's time over just hours of employment.
